Program Overview

ASU’s online Master of Social Work (MSW) with a concentration in Advanced Generalist studies is designed for working professionals to engage in learning effective and culturally competent service strategies and practices, informed by research evidence. The Advanced Generalist training covers a broad spectrum of social concerns and provides the knowledge and training to assess problems and their solutions comprehensively, preparing students to take action that reflects advanced social work practice. This program is fully online with quality instruction from faculty in a vibrant learning environment that includes two professional seminars designed to enhance the development of professional identity in the field of social work. Students complement their academic learning with hands-on experience through field education placements in their geographic region.

The Arizona State University School of Social Work is committed to addressing pressing issues and finding practical solutions. The School is one of the largest and most diverse social work programs in the world. Among our areas of strength are child welfare training, health and behavioral health, community practice, administration, policy practice and innovative services for children, youth, and families. We also have expertise in gerontology, forensic social work, integrative health, Borderland issues, and several other areas. Our expertise and attention to cultural diversity and the distinct populations of the Southwest are unique. The School is fully accredited by the Council on Social Work Education (CSWE).

A career in social work provides great opportunities to make a real difference in helping those in need – through direct service provision to individuals, families, groups, and communities; developing innovative public and nonprofit programs; and creating more just social and economic policies. You will find our community of researchers, teachers, students, and practitioners to be a stimulating and welcoming environment in which to create a unique and meaningful career.

Career Paths

Few professions offer more diverse employment opportunities. Master’s prepared professional social work practitioners are employed in public and private health and human service agencies, schools, hospitals, and research and policy organizations. They work with clients who face challenges such as adoption, aging, substance abuse, domestic violence, disabilities, child neglect and abuse, mental health problems, chronic or catastrophic illnesses, loss of a loved one, and divorce, as well as in the areas of research, policy, planning, administration and community organizing. Trends suggest that the demand for social work professionals will grow dramatically over the next decade. Salaries for beginning level, master's prepared social workers typically range from $36,039 - $56,226 depending on qualifications and geographic area. Now is an excellent time to pursue a degree in social work!
