Intercultural Harmony

Welcome to the Intercultural Harmony Project

Harmony results from individuals and groups communicating successfully and overcoming the differences, tensions and conflicts of daily life. Like in music, harmonious coexistence incorporates the sounds and voices of many. Harmony allows for occasional dissonance, but overall, the melody prevails.

OVERVIEW

The purpose of the Intercultural Harmony Project was to arrive at a basic curriculum for harmonious coexistence that could be shared with individuals and groups involved in educational or community affairs.

A group of community leaders of various ethnic groups, cultures and faiths met at a retreat to discuss how individuals are influenced by their own cultures, values, norms and ways of behaving. The group members needed to practice harmonious coexistence as they analyzed how they received the messages of other cultures, languages, religions and points of view and how they could use those messages to create harmony or to fuel disharmony. The result of the meetings was the development of a curriculum incorporating principles of intercultural dialogue and harmonious coexistence selected from research and practice. The curriculum not only offers principles and related concepts as the backbone for action but incorporates practical step-by-step exercises that can be adapted to help individuals or groups practice meaningful dialogue among very different groups.

We offer this curriculum in the hope that individuals or groups consulting it will make a commitment to understanding why so many of us have difficulties relating to people different from ourselves and, more importantly, that they will take steps to remediate the situation. Our panel of experts recognized that harmony lies beyond words and appreciated that it requires more than mere formalities. Our community leaders echoed the words of many in articulating great hope for the children while recognizing that they, too, must practice harmony. If we are to resolve some of the tensions we face, we need to take steps beyond differences and move toward reconciling them in ways that can enhance all the citizens of the world.

INSTRUCTIONS
We began our curriculum-building effort by reaching agreement among the panel of community leaders on some basic pre-requisites of intercultural harmony. We encourage you to begin by reading them under the heading of Assumptions.

When consulting this web page, next visit Principles (from 1-15), which are concepts upon which the curriculum was built. Principles are complemented by key thoughts, listed on the page where each principle appears. Exercises are activities in which a group can engage to practice harmonious behaviors, and the Step-by-Step pages (from 1-29) show exactly how to practice those behaviors in a simple and fun way. For a better understanding, we suggest that you begin by examining the principles and then move, in sequential order, to the detailed step-by-step exercises. The exercises and the steps suggested can be adapted to various different audiences, school children, community groups, seniors, etc.

The project was based at the ASU College of Extended Education and was directed by Emilia Martinez-Brawley, Professor of Social Work and John F. Roatch Distinguished Community Service Scholar, who has many years of experience teaching and researching issues related to intercultural communication and exchange.

Marcie Lee assisted in the development of the exercises, Judith Padres with the research and Kenichi Maruyama with administration.

We acknowledge the participation of a distinguished panel of community professionals and the support of the College of Extended Education staff, particularly Chrys Gakopoulos of the Marketing Department, who provided the technical expertise for the web-based product.

Ten Woods kindly permitted us to use a melody from her CD "Tucson to Tir na nOg," containing Celtic-Sonoran ballads and harmonies, www.aslingwestmusic.com. We appreciated Natalie Gakopoulos putting the music on the web.

Emilia Martinez-Brawley, Chrys Gakopoulos, Kenichi Maruyama.
Standing from left to right:
Judith Padres and Marcie Lee.
The atmosphere of the retreat fostered openness, emotional trust and security. Individuals verbalized true challenges and concerns while never letting the process of communication break down.

Principle One: step-by-step exercises

The language we use to describe cultural situations is not precise.

1. I KNOW THAT'S WHAT I SAID, BUT THE PICTURE IN MY HEAD IS DIFFERENT!

Doing this exercise will show

- People translate and understand identical words differently
- The exact same words mean different things to different people

People who realize this are better equipped

- To see that hurt from words can be the result of misunderstanding rather than intentional insult
- To ask for clarification

To do this exercise you will need

- At least three members of the group who speak a common second language (for example, three Spanish speakers)
- To have one of the three bilingual members prepare ahead of time a vignette in the second language. The vignette should not exceed four brief sentences. The writer should lead the exercise. (See below)
- A circular seating arrangement

To complete this exercise

- The leader will explain to the entire group that he/she will read a short vignette and ask each bilingual member to write down what they heard. Each member will then share their version of the vignette with the group.
- Discuss the differences in what the various speakers envisioned and consequently translated. Show how the same words can enhance different scenarios for each speaker.

VIGNETTE

El Pobrecito

más sus muñecos de madera.

2. I THOUGHT I COULD TAKE A MESSAGE!

Doing this exercise will show

- People usually modify words in their attempt to repeat exactly what they have heard
- Frequent repetition of original words by different people usually increases the degree to which meaning is modified

People who realize this are better equipped

- To ask for clarification before making a judgment or drawing a conclusion

To do this exercise, you will need

- Group members sitting in a circle, close enough to each other to whisper in their neighbors’ ears

To complete this exercise

Have someone write a sentence on a piece of paper that no one else sees and set the paper aside.

While all other group members sit quietly, the writer whispers, as clearly as possible, the sentence he or she wrote down, into the ear of the person sitting next to him/her, and this continues through the end of the line.

The person who has heard the words whispers them to the next person.

- The last person hears the sentence then says it out loud for the whole group to hear. These words are likely to be different from the words originally written down, which the writer now shows to the group.
- Have a discussion on why words are often changed when repeated

3. BRIDGES TO BABEL

Doing this exercise will show

- There are many common roots for the same words in different languages
- People who speak different languages have more in common with other individuals than they often consider

People who realize this are better equipped

- To appreciate the ways in which languages have influenced and enhanced each other
- To appreciate and possibly develop interest in other languages and the people who speak them
- To feel more confident in communicating with those who speak other languages
- To teach and learn words in each other’s languages

To do this exercise, you will need

- A good English dictionary with word roots
- Bilingual dictionaries

|       | Instruct participants to select and write at least one word they think comes from another language and explain why they chose it.
|       | Point out the commonalities of diverse languages and diverse people and how much they can enrich their own language by learning about others. |

| VARIATION 1 | Have a small group prepare a list of English words with common roots as those in Spanish, French, Italian, Portuguese, German, etc. When the list is complete, put one word in at least two languages on a blank card, preparing the same number of cards as participants. Distribute one card to each person in the group who will read and write the pair of words on a board or easein the appropriate column for each language. |

- Note the similarities. |

|             | Distribute the list to small groups and have people test each other on the origin of the words. |

Four Peaks or Cinco Picos

According to Arizona history the mountain range which lies 25 miles northeast of Phoenix contains a group of peaks known as Cinco Picos in Spanish and Four Peaks in English. According to Barnes (1966), the Apache’s sign for these peaks was “one hand held up with fingers widespread, indicating it meant either four peaks or four spaces between them.” Obviously different people interpreted the sign differently. To do this exercise you will need

- To prepare a customized list of descriptions, attributes, and interests suited to the group's purpose (camping, foreign language club, cooking class)
- To have at least double the number of selections as there are participants in the group
- To duplicate the list for distribution to each group member
- For an example for a math class or club exercise, see box below

To complete this exercise

- Ask participants to arrange themselves around the perimeter of the room
- Distribute one list to each person
- Explain that the task is to fill in at least one half of the blank spaces on the page
- Discuss what people have learned about each other, what they have in common, and how they are different
- When the exercise is complete, discuss what was not filled in

Example for a get-acquainted meeting

- Fill in at least half of the blanks on your list; find and write down the name of a person who fits the statement.
- Got an "A" in algebra
- Has traveled to Ecuador
- Knows Italian as well as Spanish
- Teaches Spanish in a school
- Has been to Greece and Lebanon
- Has a job tutoring at the mosque
- Is a volunteer translator at the synagogue
- Has a brother who is a missionary
- Knows how to dance flamenco
- Makes delicious tortillas

Intercultural Harmony

2. STEP 2
   - To respect diversity among those who share a common interest
   - To collaborate rather than compete within the group
   - To widen their own horizons by considering other viewpoints on the same subject
   - To provide concrete information about their own background, culture, and relevant skills

To do this exercise you will need
- To design statements that participants complete about the endeavor and/or the backgrounds of participants in the common endeavor

To complete this exercise
- Seat participants in a circle or semicircle
- Announce that the entire group, one at a time around the circle, will complete the following statements. There can be multiple rounds.

EXAMPLES
- My favorite holiday is _______ because _______.
- My favorite play is _______ because _______.
- When I have to solve a problem, the first thing I do is _______ because _______.
- I prefer to have an early/mid lunch because _______.
- I am afraid/happy to talk to strangers because _______.
- I always have to accept what my father says because _______.

4. PEER PAIRS

Recommend Your Group Sees "The Mighty," A Film Based On The Book "Freak The Mighty"

By Rodman Philbrick

1. STEP 1
   - Doing this exercise will show
     - Peer teaching relationships help partners learn new approaches and expose them to new ideas and interests
     - Partners are strengthened by each other's talents
     - Every person has talents or strengths, challenges and shortcomings

2. STEP 2
   - People who realize this are better equipped
     - To understand that lack of experience is often the sole reason a person feels he or she cannot do something or do it well
     - To collaborate rather than compete
     - To realize that in peer partnerships, people with shortcomings enable their partners to see what it is like to deal with these challenges

3. STEP 3
   - To do this exercise you will need
     - Group members to talk about their strengths and challenges. As they talk, develop an exchange chart on the board.
     - Match a person possessing a special skill with a person who wants to develop skills in that area.
     - Group members can do this themselves using the board chart for the exchange.
     - Assist pairs in setting clearly defined goals for each session and an overall goal for all sessions

4. STEP 4
   - To complete this exercise
     - Monitor progress of peer pairs, making sure they fairly assess their progress and adjust their goals and timelines as necessary

EXAMPLES
- "I am good with computer skills" is matched to "I want to learn Powerpoint"
- "I can play basketball quite well" is matched to "I wish I had better coordination"
- "I can play the Spanish guitar" is matched to "I wish I could play rock and roll"

Principle Four: step-by-step exercises

Knowledge can contribute to prejudice reduction, but knowledge by itself does not always reduce prejudice.

EXERCISES [1] [2] [3]

1. A Fair Affair

Doing this exercise will show
- How all members of a community can be celebrated

People who realize this are better equipped
- To feel invested in their community
- To work for the welfare of the community
- To value individuals in the community
- To value diversity in the community

To do this exercise you will need
- Volunteers to research and plan a Community Cultures Fair
- Research groups that exist in the community, making sure that all groups are invited/represented
- Either decide on a theme like foods of different cultures, holidays of different cultures, or let each group decide how to represent themselves — (with foods, costumes, music, etc.)

To complete this exercise
- Invite a representative from each group identified in the community to help plan the details of the affair
- Publicize the event to the entire community

Return to Top

2. Visit and Discover

Doing this exercise will show
- How enriching it is to discover differences within our own communities

People who realize this are better equipped
- To appreciate differences and similarities within their own communities
- To respect the experiences of others

To do this exercise you will need
- A guide to community neighborhoods and resources
- A willingness to plan with different people

To complete this exercise
- Arrange to visit an ethnic neighborhood and have your group eat at an ethnic restaurant
- Eat and talk to the chef about the new dishes and ingredients you have discovered

VARIATIONS
- Follow the steps above and plan a trip to a foreign country
- Follow the steps above and plan a trip to many different churches, making sure your group talks to ministers, priests, rabbis, etc. about their faiths

Return to Top

3. The Golden Rule

Doing this exercise will show
- How the basic principles of different faiths are similar

People who realize this are better equipped
- To respect the central moral commitments of different people

To do this exercise you will need
- Various versions of the Golden Rule (see box below)

To complete this exercise
- Have your group read and discuss the various versions below
- Place on the board a chart and have group members write down similar beliefs

Principle Five: step-by-step exercises

A supportive, nurturing, and positive environment fosters an open-minded individual and helps overcome differences in resources and personalities.

| EXERCISES | 1 | 2 |

1. The "BEST WE CAN BE" Campaign

Doing this exercise will show

- The advantages of collaboration relative to competition for some goals.
- That because there are no “losers” in collaborative work, there is a greater degree of sustained participation and enthusiasm about projects. When goals are met and everyone is satisfied, everyone is a winner.

People who realize this are better equipped

- To collaborate effectively.
- To understand and communicate to others that collaborative work is more inclusive than competition.
- To understand that when goals are met and everyone is satisfied, everyone is a “winner.”

To do this exercise, you will need

- A leader versed in techniques of collaboration.

To complete this exercise

- Select a group goal (for example, beautifying the school grounds, adopting a needy family, establishing a neighborhood garden).
- Plan a campaign in which people take different responsibilities and everyone does the best job of contributing that they can.
- Monitor progress and adjust along the way.

EXAMPLE

“We have a garden that our students and staff love” rather than “our garden is bigger, prettier, more expensive than yours.” The needy family we are assisting has enough food for a month” rather than “We collected more money, food, etc. than the neighboring school.”

Return to Top

2. I Am Good At ...

Doing this exercise will show

How people can recognize and acknowledge (even publicly) their own worth without devaluing others.

People who realize this are better equipped

- To collaborate as well as compete.
- To reveal talents and good qualities about themselves that can complement and not conflict with others or unnecessarily duplicate skills.
- To use time more efficiently by discovering and utilizing a greater number of members’ skills.
- To quickly meet others and recognize new aspects, talents, and interests of people they already know.

To do this exercise you will need

- A leader who can encourage each person to take a turn and explain that discussion will take place only after each person has spoken.
- Participants arranged in a circle.

To complete this exercise

- The leader explains that participants will go around the circle and one at a time, will state one specific thing he or she is good at (for example, “I am a good dancer” “I am a creative cook”).
- The leader says that discussion will take place only when everyone has spoken and will focus on the difference between recognizing real strengths and bragging or ranking.

VARIATION

“Every thought you knew me” (especially useful if group members all know each other):

Each person will state one specific thing about himself/herself that most people don’t know (for example, “Most people don’t know that I have a passion for stamp collecting” or “Most people don’t know that I play in a jazz trio.”)

Principle Six: step-by-step exercises

Language that does not judge character is key to harmonious interaction.

EXERCISES | 1 | 2

1. Descriptive Praise or "I can teach you a foreign language in about an hour!"

   Doing this exercise will show
   - Describing rather than judging the actions of others can positively influence their behavior.
   - Precise language for telling people what to do rather than what not to do.

   People who realize this are better equipped
   - To enhance the self-esteem of those with whom they interact.
   - To learn to change their behavior rather than question their good character.
   - To diffuse rather than escalate conflict.
   - To widen rather than narrow possibilities for more productive interactions and ever deepening relationships with others.
   - To feel less threatened and more willing to change for the better when appropriately criticized by others.
   - To build relationships rather than isolate themselves and others.

   To do this exercise you will need
   - Someone who is trained or willing to learn the language of "descriptive praise" to lead the group exercise.
   - Examples that list descriptive language instead of judgments.
   - Seating arranged in a circle.

   To complete this exercise
   - The leader explains that participants are about to learn a new way of speaking to others.
   - The leader explains that the usual way of speaking in our society tends to be judgmental.
   - The leader suggests the use of language that corrects negative behavior but does not judge.
   - The leader asks participants to think of one sentence they said to someone that they could have said differently.
   - When the first person speaks the leader asks the group how to transpose the words so that they indicate what to do instead of what not to do.
   - At the end, the leader explains that this new way of speaking expands rather than contracts possibilities for meaningful conversation by emphasizing open comments or questions ("Tell me about your turban, rather than what's that thing on your head?").
   - The leader emphasizes that people who are spoken to in this way avoid the disharmony of unnecessary confrontational language.

   Examples
   - "You are insensitive" becomes "It hurts me when you call me names."
   - "What's that thing on your head?" becomes "I've always wondered why some people in (country) wear those. Would you mind explaining them to me?"
   - "Wow, what a cool African painting" becomes "Tell me about your drawing!"
   - "What a good girl! You understand Ahmed" becomes "It sure helps me when you listen carefully to Ahmed."
   - "You're selfish for not sharing the bike with Giuseppe" becomes "When you are done riding the bike, please let Giuseppe know so he gets a turn."

2. Agreeing to Disagree Agreeably

   Doing this exercise will show
   - That with the ability to disagree agreeably, people can more effectively sustain and even enhance relationships.

   People who realize this are better equipped
   - To expand their social networks.
   - To coexist harmoniously with people who have different beliefs, opinions, practices and outlooks.
   - To know and trust that relationships can survive disagreement and conflict.

   To do this exercise, you will need
   - A group of people who have each explicitly committed to sustaining contact throughout heated debate.
   - A leader capable of teaching techniques of productive dialogue and effectively moderating heated debate.
   - A selection of flashpoint issues such as elections, religious beliefs, healthcare options, immigration.
   - Pencils and paper for everyone.
   - Participants arranged in a circle.

   To complete this exercise
   - The leader introduces the topic and instructs participants that he/she will assist people in reformulating their language and reconsiding their actions when they or others feel communication is breaking down due to interruptions, verbally attacking another's character, or threatening to depart. If these occur, the leader will say something like:
     "A more effective way to state your position is..."
   - "It's frustrating when you are afraid you will forget your point. Jot it down till your turn comes."
Intercultural Harmony

"You clearly disagree with this policy because it doesn't benefit children."

Principle Seven: step-by-step exercises

People can appreciate what is different and what is the same in people.

EXERCISES: 1 | 2 | 3

1. Assumptions Avalanche

Doing this exercise will show
- Faulty reasoning constrains freedom and satisfying social interactions
- People can learn to stop the process of faulty reasoning

People who realize this are better equipped
- To expand the choices they have in most situations
- To learn how to accept differences without attaching value judgments
- To build relationships that are deep rather than relationships that stay superficial
- To avoid "faulty reasoning" and consequent limitation of options (see box below)

To do this exercise you will need
- A leader capable of showing participants how to transform faulty reasoning into rational choice

To complete this exercise
- The leader asks participants to list things they don’t like or are afraid of and how they came to have those feelings
- The leader uses language that superimposes appropriate limitations on the illogical or limiting assumptions that are mentioned (for example, “I don’t like math because I had a bad math teacher last year” can become “It’s unfortunate I had an ineffective math teacher. This semester, with my new teacher, I expect that the concepts will be clearer to me”)
- The group practices these transformations until all participants can do them effectively

EXAMPLES

- “My fiancée betrayed me.” > my fiancée is female > women can’t be trusted, can become
  - Miriam betrayed my trust. I sure am disappointed and sad we could not work it out.”
- “Brian was mean to me.” > Brian is from (x country) > all boys from (x country) are mean” can become
  - I will tell Brian I don’t like that behavior and don’t want him to do it again.”
- “A white person at the community center called me names.” > I am Chinese > all while people hate Chinese can become
  - That person is ignorant and scared. I will introduce myself and give her another chance to call me by my name.”

2. Let Me Compliment You

Doing this exercise will show
- That you can be good without being better than someone else

People who realize this are better equipped
- To understand and admit that they are good in their own right
- To see that collaborating creates multiple "winners" and eliminates "losers"
- To distinguish when competition has its appropriate place (in sports, for example) and when collaboration is more effective in human relationships.
- To compete less and collaborate more on group endeavors

To do this exercise you will need
- A leader willing and able to keep the exercise moving without interruption until each person has stated one thing he or she is good at and who then summarizes the potential of the group

To complete this exercise
- The leader instructs participants to complete the sentence “I am good at _____.
- The leader expands that discussion takes place only after every person has offered one thing he or she is good at and that the leader will help summarize the complementary skills at the end of each round
- Subsequent rounds can be added

EXAMPLES

- “John is verbal (and can ask the questions during the interview), Mary is quiet (and can watch the candidate’s body language), and Lin is an English tutor (and can evaluate the candidate’s essay for writing abilities). We will make a great interview committee.”

3. Voices Of A Single Culture

Doing this exercise will show
- Cultural origins shape but do not accurately define or explain an individual
- There is diversity within each culture
- Learning about others can include practical experience as well as academic study
Intercultural Harmony

People who realize this are better equipped
- To evaluate people as individuals while developing respect for individuals’ cultural origins
- To interact and work more effectively with a wider variety of people
- To respect cultural heritage of diverse individuals
- To learn and teach about people from other backgrounds

To do this exercise you will need
- Small groups to plan and conduct research on different facets or individuals of a particular culture

To complete this exercise
- Ask the entire group to list all the possible ways to study a culture (see example 1 below)
- Ask the entire group to identify figures of the same culture who represent differences within the same culture and establish a chart of comparisons and contrasts (see example 2 below)

EXAMPLE 1
If studying Portugal, divide class into smaller groups assigning one to research and prepare typical foods, one to make a recording of the music, another to bring photos of (or actual) ethnic costumes. Assign another to research, learn and teach Portuguese greetings, another to identify Portugal on the map and write to the Portuguese Ministry of Tourism, and discuss its geographical characteristics, and establish pen pals in Portugal.

EXAMPLE 2
Have the group research and present the different approaches to the race issue of Martin Luther King, W.E.B. DuBois, Booker T. Washington, and Marcus Garvey. Have them discuss how they were similar and differed. Fill in the chart of similarities and differences.

PRINCIPLES: 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15
Intercultural Harmony

Principle Eight: step-by-step exercises

Individuals bring their cultural assumptions to any dispute. In an intercultural dispute, divergent cultural assumptions may cause one or both parties to experience frustration.

EXERCISES

1. You're Not Like That At All!

<table>
<thead>
<tr>

<th>Doing this exercise will show</th>
<th>People who realize this are better equipped</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1.</td>
<td>Assumptions are incomplete and inaccurate measures of a culture</td>
<td>To evaluate people realistically based on interactions and behavior</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.</td>
<td>Positive and negative stereotypes hide the truth equally</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

To do this exercise you will need

- Groups of diverse individuals

To complete this exercise

- Have the group identify the assets of other cultures they know
- Have the group move beyond stereotypes (Blacks are good dancers, Latinos are expressive, Whites are reserved, Asians are smart, Jews are rich) by identifying members of each group who are accomplished in those areas or fit the stereotype or description, but also members who are not
- Discuss ways to get to know people without preconceived assumptions

2. Unique Behaviors

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Step</th>
<th>Doing this exercise will show</th>
<th>People who realize this are better equipped</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1.</td>
<td>The uniqueness and strengths of different peoples</td>
<td>To live harmoniously with others</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

To do this exercise you will need

- To go to an ethnic neighborhood, market, restaurant or similar setting
- To be a keen observer

To complete this exercise

- Visit an ethnic setting and have the group keep a chart of similarities and differences observed in the way people behave to each other
- Talk about the differences and reflect on the cultures

EXAMPLES

- Observe people in a packed elevator in various ethnic neighborhoods. How close are they to one another? Do they talk to each other? Do they apologize constantly if they touch each other? ...
- Observe people eating in various ethnic restaurants. Do they quietly speak or are they overly expressive? Do they interact freely with people at other tables or not? Can you read the expressions in people’s faces and guess their moods?

1. Dialogue Despite Differences

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>STEP</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| 1 | Doing this exercise will show
  - People willing to maintain dialogue despite conflict and disagreement emerge able to understand and coexist with others |
| 2 | People who realize this are better equipped
  - To live harmoniously with a wider variety of people than before
  - To advocate for the rights of others
  - To disagree agreeably |
| 3 | To do this exercise you will need
  - To assemble a group of individuals committed to participating in and remaining part of a dialogue on highly controversial subjects
  - To have each participant write down and submit to the organizer a statement based on one cultural perception (“Democracy is the best form of government.”)
  - To have the exercise organizer select the order in which statements will be discussed |
| 4 | To complete this exercise
  - Introduce the statement
  - Elicit and write down all possible alternatives: “Judgment by learned elders is the best form of government.” “Monarchy is the best form of government.”
  - Discuss and debate all positions
  - Point out that everyone has remained engaged, a key to intercultural harmony |

PRINCIPLES

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15
Principle Ten: step-by-step exercises

When addressing controversial issues, elicit various points of view. Premature agreement can curtail dialogue.

EXERCISES | 1

1. Calculated Controversy

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>STEP</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| 1    | Doing this exercise will show
      | - People with conflicting ideas can arrive at and live with "provisional understandings," from which rational solutions can emerge
      | - Realize that understanding does not have to emerge as consensus  |
| 2    | People who realize this are better equipped
      | - To understand and accept conflicting points of view even in the absence of consensus
      | - To widen the possibilities of arriving at lasting solutions  |
| 3    | To do this exercise you will need
      | - A highly controversial topic, likely to elicit very different opinions
      | - Commitment from participants to remain part of the exercise, despite disagreement
      | - A leader able to moderate discussion without attempting to sway opinion
      | - A board to record points of views and interim solutions  |
| 4    | To complete this exercise
      | - The leader will explain that the goal of this dialogue is to understand the variety of viewpoints held by different individuals and to practice negotiation
      | - The leader will explain that an effective way to achieve this is to have each person clearly and concisely articulate their point of view on the selected topic and then clarify it by answering questions posed by others
      | - On a board, a member of the group records the points of view
      | - During the dialogue, members of the group ask questions and clarify doubts
      | - The leader or a member of the group contrasts and compares areas where agreement has emerged  |

EXAMPLES
TOPIC: Big highways across cities
- "Big highways cause air pollution and take away traffic from in-town businesses"
- "Big highways encourage drivers to go at fast speeds"
- "Big highways encourage drivers to small towns and increase crime*"
- "Big highways are an economic necessity for modern-day living*"
- "Big highways decrease the number of traffic deaths on city streets*"
- A potential compromise after discussion:
  - "It would be ok to build XX highway provided the speed limit is lowered across town and in-town businesses are clearly advertised at each exit.*"
  - "When the highway is built, the town will make sure to enforce speed limits off the highway.*"

Principle Eleven: step-by-step exercises
Acknowledging wrongdoing is a vital and essential step for peaceful living.

EXERCISES

1. Forgiving Faces

   Doing this exercise will show
   - Harmony may be achieved even if justice is not
   - Among people committed to justice, harmonious living can occur while justice is being sought (even in the face of injustice)

   People who realize this
   - Are in a better position to prevent further injustice
   - Are more willing to take risks for the sake of justice

   To do this exercise you will need
   - A leader well versed in different paradigms of forgiveness to conduct and moderate the exercise
   - Paper and pencils for each participant

   To complete this exercise
   - The leader will instruct participants that during this session, or over the next few sessions of the conference to:
     - Think of and record three actions for which they have been generously forgiven and three they are willing to forgive. Discuss one from each category.
     - Think of and record things they cannot forgive. Discuss why.
     - Consider going to someone they have wronged and ask for another chance to do better and be forgiven.
     - Think of someone they feel should ask for forgiveness. Discuss how they can approach that person.
     - Talk about current efforts to publicly acknowledge the hurts of slavery, the loss and annexation of others’ lands, the internment of people, and the suppression of human rights around the world.
     - Invite (or listen to) speakers with various opinions to encourage discussion and thought on these matters.
     - Study (research) and learn about the spaces that commemorate historical events that have meaning for diverse groups.

EXAMPLE

An individual could say "I told my neighbor from Ghana how sorry I was I had not invited him to the neighborhood party when he first arrived. He was very gracious and told me not to worry, that I probably did not know he was a neighbor and that he would come to next year's party.

Intercultural Harmony

Principle Thirteen: step-by-step exercises
Forgiveness can be a spiritual experience or simply a step toward contentment. Respecting the spaces of people, their heroes and accomplishments can move us toward restoration and harmony.

1. The Spaces of History

Doing this exercise will show
- That we have much to learn about cherished and sad spaces in the world
- The more we learn about what is important to groups who have suffered, the easier we gain their respect

People who realize this are better equipped
- To live with others in harmonious ways
- Not to offend others

To do this exercise you will need
- Access to the Web
- A comprehensive encyclopedia of American history
- A world map

To complete this exercise
- Assign the group to explore the Web (see suggestions below)
- Develop a presentation of selected American history sites related to different groups. Each person will make a commitment to learn about at least two new sites. Some might research African-American history sites, others American-Indian sites, etc.

EXAMPLES
- The following are links to possible sites:
  - http://www2.cr.nps.gov/pad/adventure/links.htm
  - http://www.cr.nps.gov/NRR/wnp/fe700.html
  - http://www.cincinnati.com/ne/archive/05-06-03/
  - http://www.cr.nps.gov/history/online_books/anthropology74/index.htm

2. What Was Guadalupe Hidalgo?

Doing this exercise will show
- How much we need to learn about the relationship between Mexico and the United States
- How many states used to be part of Mexican territory

People who realize this are better equipped
- To understand their Mexican neighbors and live harmoniously with them
- To explore sometimes forgotten aspects of American history

To do this exercise you will need
- Access to the Web
- A comprehensive encyclopedia of American history
- A map of the United States

To complete this exercise
- Assign the group to explore the Web (see suggestions below)
- Have members report on the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, or the Gadsden Purchase, or the current importance of the Rio Grande, or the Arizona desert, etc.
- Have the members highlight these various sites on their maps and discuss possible differences they make to life in the U.S. today

EXAMPLES
- The following are links to possible sites:
  - http://www.loc.gov/exhibits/gtrtreaty/
  - http://www2.cr.nps.gov/pad/adventure/links.htm

3. Much, Much More than the Sopranos!

Doing this exercise will show
- How much we need to learn about different people even when we think we know a lot

People who realize this are better equipped
- To appreciate the tremendous contributions of different ethnic groups
- To want to learn more about new comers

To do this exercise you will need
- Access to the Web or to a comprehensive biographical dictionary or encyclopedia
Step 4

To complete this exercise
- Have members of the group list as many prominent Italians and Italian-Americans living or dead along with the positive accomplishments each has achieved in various fields (for example, someone can list Michelangelo, great architect, painter of the Sistine Chapel)
- Sitting in a circle, each person asks their neighbor to guess either the person or the accomplishment

Variations
Following the steps above, this exercise can be done with different ethnic groups.
Principle Fourteen: step-by-step exercises

When various groups and their interests are well represented at the top, things tend to work better up and down the line.

EXERCISES | 1

1. TRAILBLAZERS TALE

   Doing this exercise will show
   - Citizens of renown come from every cultural group even if the individuals and their cultural backgrounds are unrecognized
   - Achievement (success) exists and is possible in all cultural groups

   People who realize this are better equipped
   - Teach diversity in any subject matter they are transmitting to others
   - To build into agency groups and structures visible, effective, meaningful representation at the top, understanding that doing this motivates people to work harder for the endeavor

   To do this exercise you will need
   - Volunteers within the larger group to research and list by cultural group and field, musical, artistic, literary, architectural, educational, political, scientific, entertainment, sports, fashion, philosophic, adventurer trailblazers, achievers, and contributors from the ethnic, cultural, and religious backgrounds represented in the group
   - Copies of the lists for all participants
   - Participants seated in a circle

   To complete this exercise
   - The leader specifies the cultural group being studied this session
   - Going around the circle as many times as possible, have each participant name a person from that cultural group who is accomplished in any of the above fields
   - When the participants have exhausted the personalities they can think of, hand out the research committee’s list so everyone can see how many more exist and add names not on the published list.

   VARIATIONS
   - List by endeavor (music, science, politics) the name and cultural group of as many culturally diverse individuals as possible (music: Izhak Perlman – Jewish, Jesse Norman – African-American, Luciano Pavarotti – Italian, Placido Domingo – Mexican, etc.)
   - Categories can be further subdivided (music: opera, jazz, classical, country western, etc.) and/or designated as contemporary or historical figures. This can also be done by country as well as cultural group.
   - “Lacking on a List” – Prepare a list of achievement (U.S. presidents, corporate officers, political bodies, etc.). Discuss the list in terms of diversity, noting the unrepresented cultural groups and focusing on reasons (historical prejudice, geographic distance, socio-economic status) specific groups are not there.
   - Return to Top

Click on the principles below:

| 1 | The language we use to describe cultural situations is not precise.                        |
| 2 | Facts are interpreted through the experiences and biases of those hearing them.          |
| 3 | Prejudices must be acknowledged to move toward harmonious living. Behaving harmoniously can become second nature to those who practice. |
| 4 | Knowledge can contribute to prejudice reduction, but knowledge by itself does not always reduce prejudice. |
| 5 | A supportive, nurturing and positive environment fosters an open-minded individual and helps overcome differences in resources and personalities. |
| 6 | Language that does not judge character is key to harmonious interaction.                  |
| 7 | People can appreciate what is different and what is the same in people.                  |
